I Love You, but...

A series of animal relationship punnies because...

Love hurts

Because love is all you need,
Because I can't do this alone,
Because I just don't need you anymore,
Because you choose your destiny,
Because history repeats itself,
Because I'm stronger than you know,
Because I'm nothing without you,
Because I don't want to die alone,
Because we all deserve to be loved,
Because I adore you,
Because I deplore you,
Because animals are people and people are animals too

In the Beacon Room

These paintings are a part of a relatively new and intimate leap into my most personal and honest work. The investigation, is, as they say, ongoing, but nonetheless, the process has provided me with enough words to begin speaking actual sentences, where before I was mute. Figures and faces (borrowed or imagined) at the center, and a cast of found and fabricated images are melded onto a textured background infused with the melodrama and iconography of the printed page. My paintings have become a duel, (or a dance?) between what is on top, what is beneath, what meaning is intended and what is unexpected. They have a foundation secure enough to get me started, but quickly become an adventure with an unknown ending.

Rick Price is an Artist from Southern California living for the last decade in New York's Hudson Valley.
